

CONFERENCE BRIEF

The Group for the Study of Irish Historic Settlement is organising a weekend conference on the theme of Settlement and Landscape in Gaelic Ireland, c. 1350-1600, which will be held at All Hallows College, Dublin, February 26-28, 1999. This initiative is an important milestone in the study of Irish historic settlement, as for the first time a large group of scholars will come together to discuss the nature of secular settlement within the Gaelic lordships of later medieval Ireland. Fourteen historians, archaeologists and geographers have been invited to present conference papers. The conference and the intended publication of its proceedings will seek to redress a significant absence in the secular settlement history of later medieval Ireland, focusing on neglected topics such as woodland cover and agricultural practices, Gaelic estates, regional studies of tower houses, crannogs, assembly sites in Gaelic lordships, and the exploitation of the coast in this period.
